The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: None of the prior art of record teaches or suggests a rotary machine for blow molding containers from a previously injected preform, the machine having several blow molding stations mounted on a rotor driven continuously in rotation, wherein each blow molding station has a mold carrier unit that can carry a two impression mold having two mold cavities each of which is intended to receive a preform, a blowing unit furnished with two blow molding nozzles that can inject the pressurized fluid into the preforms in order to mold the containers, wherein the blow molding unit is mounted on a frame element of the blow molding station in such a way that the two nozzles are arranged on either side of the principal axis (A4) of the mold carrier unit, in correspondence with the principal axes (A2, A3) of the two molding cavities, characterized in that the machine can be changed over to a one-impression configuration in which the mold carrier unit carries a one-impression configuration in which the mold carrier unit carries a one-impression mold comprising a single mold cavity the axis of which is appreciably the same as the principal axis (A4) of the mold carrier unit, and in that the blow molding unit has a second mounting position on the frame element in which the first of the two nozzles, is arranged in correspondence with the principal axis (A4) of the only molding cavity of the one impression mold. The closest prior art (French reference 2709264) discloses a rotary mold for supporting a mold having two cavities and appropriate blowing means for molding the articles, but the reference neither discloses or suggests the structure which allows conversion from a two cavity mold to a one cavity mold as claimed. Lee
